SOCIAL JUSTICE AWARENESS MONTH

Building a just society has been a concern for religious and secular organizations alike. Human imperfection means that there will never be any wholly just society. But over time certain values emerge that form the basis for decision-making and the progress of peoples. Upholding the dignity of the human person is a core principle. Individuals, communities, and nations are called to protect that dignity. A corollary is that not only is the individual person sacred, but that people have the right to organize themselves into societies that promote the common good. Consequently, people have both rights and responsibilities, one of which is to protect the poor and vulnerable. In a just society, the economy must serve people. Work has dignity of its own. In our care for creation, we act as stewards of the earth, recognizing our responsibility to future generations.
